Richard Blakeslee had always had schat he wanted, and when his pri-tate secretary told him she was loaving to be married, he refused to let her go. Because he needed her, he finally carried her off on his yncht bound for a South American business trip, but on board he saw her not as an office machine, but as a teoman, and fell in love with her. Theo was sucret off her feet by his oppeal, but she was loyal to dinmy Bland, the man she had promised to marry, until she returned to him and found him lacking in faith: then she broke her enganement. Of course, Blakeslee did not know this and Theo teas too proud to tell him. When he sent her a check for $300 she promptly took it back to him, and he was forced to accept it.
